

EGYPT: IS IT A REVOLUTION?

In the two years since the ouster of 30-year autocrat Hosni Mubarak, Egypt has gone through two referenda and three elections. The transition period is officially over, but protests rage in the streets, strikes grip factories, and dissent has become a way of life. From 18 heady days in Tahrir Square to a more protracted struggle—what is the course of Egypt's revolution?

SHARIF ABDEL KOUDDOUS

Tuesday, April 2, 2013

4:30 p.m.

Terrace Rooms, Mather Hall

Reception following, Hamlin Hall

Trinity College
HARTFORD CONNECTICUT

Sharif Abdel Kouddous is an independent journalist based in Cairo. He is a correspondent for the TV/radio program Democracy Now and a fellow at The Nation Institute. Over the past two years, Sharif has reported from Egypt, Gaza, and Syria. He is regularly interviewed on international TV programs, including MSNBC's The Rachel Maddow Show, Hardball with Chris Matthews, BBC World News, and Al Jazeera English. His articles have appeared in The Nation, Foreign Policy, The Progressive, Egypt Independent, and other publications. Sharif is the 2012 recipient of the Izzy Award for outstanding achievement in independent media.

The McGill International Studies Fund was established in 1996 with a gift from Patricia C. and Charles H. McGill '63. The gift helped secure a matching grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities. The fund supports the appointment of visiting humanities scholars, primarily international scholars, in the academic areas of international studies that include African studies, Asian studies, Latin American studies, Middle Eastern studies, post-colonial studies, and Russian and Eurasian studies.

